

Using the Library Search Hub

Accessing an e-journal/e-book through the Library Search Hub

From the RSM website, navigate to Learn – Access Library Search Hub

Search for the Journal/Book you would like to read:

In the search results, the Library Results tab will list Journals and Books (both print and electronic) and the Full Text Results tab includes articles from the RSM collection and additional references we do not hold.

Depending on the journal you would like to find, this may bring up several titles – both from the Library’s print collection and electronic titles. For e-journals, you will see ‘electronic resource’ after the title.

This is what it looks like for the Lancet. From the search result, click on Online holdings: Full Text Access via ClinicalKey eJournals : 2007 to present.

For other journals, you may see several links from various sources – just choose the one that covers the year(s) you need.

If you haven't logged on to the RSM website, you will be asked to do so at this point. Once you have logged in, you will be taken through to the journal where you can search by year/volume/title etc or you can search by title:

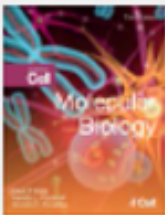

"The 2020 presidential election is the opportune moment for the American electorate to embrace change for the better, and to rejoin the global community in the pursuit of a more equitable and sustainable future."
